It’s muschious, it’s duper,

It's better than rotten old fish.
You mash it and munch it,
You chew it and crunch it!
It's lovely to hear it go squish!"

Another short tale by the famous children's author, Roald Dahl, has me eager to review and spread the word. This would be an ideal story for the likes of many children, including Neo, who loves a good bit of humour. While lazing around one day in Africa, the Enormous Crocodile tells his not so large friend that he yearns for some children to eat. He is dismissed and told that there is no way he will be able to score such a delectable treat. Off goes the Enormous Crocodile, into the African jungles, where he encounters many other animals and tells them of his fiendish plan. Again, he is dismissed, but more out of a worry for the innocent children. From there, it is up to the Enormous Crocodile to concoct the perfect plan to get these children into his belly. Armed with the knowledge of the Enormous Crocodile's plan, the jungle animals do all they can to foil it, but will they be too late?! A wonderfully amusing read for children and adults alike that keeps the reader on their toes throughout.

Dahl is a wonderful storyteller, even if the tales can sometimes flirt with the edge of the macabre. He utilises some of the wonderful things that children know about their surroundings and injects just enough 'spook' to keep children guessing. Will the child be saved or has the Enormous Crocodile found a way to win again? Delightfully simple with a quiver full of laughable moments, Roald Dahl level of writing is surely missed in modern children's storytelling.

Kudos, Mr. Dahl for another wonderful story. I hope to keep reading a collection of your work and finding new gems about which I can be proud.

It's a simple fun story of an Enormous Crocodile on the hunt for some children to eat, he believes each clever trick will prevail only to be foiled by various animals from the jungle.

One of the best aspects of this picture book is the wonderful illustrations by Quentin Blake. Both Blake and Dahl fit so seamlessly together.

Whilst the story also features the Roly Polly Bird and MuggleWump, who would later feature in The Twits adds to the enjoyment. It's the beginning of the year and somehow I find this the right time for some of Roald Dahl's stories. Also, I have quite some catching up to do since I missed out on them when I was a child.

The story is the titular enormous crocodile who is a very nasty and evil croc that likes to eat children. The animal lover in me doesn't like that very much because crocs, much like sharks, have far too bad a reputation which is why many are endangered. Nevertheless, this story is pretty old for one, and I think the main reason the author chose a crocodile was it's outer appearance (suitable for many disguises to get close to the unsuspecting children) anyway.

The story is about bullies and their ways of approaching victims and how watchful eyes and compassion from others can save the day not to mention that the bad croc gets what it deserves.

As usual, the story had the signature illustrations by Quentin Blake, only in this version they were coloured in (not used to that, my other books have the original black and white ones that I actually prefer).

It is clear that Roald Dahl is one of THE master storytellers for children and I always enjoy his stories very much, no matter how short they are! This is a short story about a very big and bad crocodile and some very lucky children. In my edition, it is lavishly illustrated by Quentin Blake in a manner that brings out the nuances of Dahl's story.

Despite the discouragement of another (and smaller) crocodile, the Enormous Crocodile has his stomach set on a meal of children who live in a village not far from the croc's river. The enormous one also has an inflated image of himself:

"I'm the bravest...."

"I'm the cleverest...."

"I have secret plans and clever tricks..."

After leaving the river he encounters a number of other animals whom he treats with contempt or tries to eat. This will prove his undoing as they become determined to not let the children fall for any of his "tricks."

The illustrations show how close the children come to being the croc's meal over and over again. Just a mite scary but most children will find it delightful.

I did a second reading with my soon to be six year old. We stopped as the crocodile was making his way to the village where he hoped to eat several children.

The next day, she wanted to continue the story to the end.

The following day, I asked her if she liked the story, and she said, "yes."

I also asked if she found it "silly" or "scary." She said "both" with a smile. My year of Roald Dahl is still going!

The Enormous Crocodile loves to eat plump, juicy little child, and he wants to eat as many as he can. But when the other animals in the jungle join together to put an end to this, the Enormous Crocodile learns a lesson he won't soon forget. This big crocodile is hungry for some children and has the perfect plan to get them or does he? He makes several other jungle animals very angry with him and they attempt to thwart his childeating ways.

This just goes to show, if you are planning something evil, do not monologue!

Happy Reading! The Enormous Crocodile, Roald Dahl

The Enormous Crocodile is a 1978 children's story, written by Roald Dahl.

The story begins in Africa in a large, deep, muddy river, where the enormous crocodile (the title character) is telling a smaller crocodile, known as the NotSoBig One, that he wants to eat children for his lunch.

The small crocodile objects, because children taste "nasty and bitter" in his opinion compared to fish, and because of what happened the last time the big crocodile tried to eat children. The larger crocodile leaves the big, brown muddy river anyway, and announces his intention to Humpy Rumpy the hippopotamus, Trunky the elephant, MuggleWump the monkey and the RolyPoly Bird.

The animals insult him and hope that he will fail miserably and will himself be killed and eaten, after which the big crocodile briefly and unsuccessfully attacks MuggleWump and the RolyPoly Bird.

First of all, the crocodile heads to a coconut tree forest, not far away from a town and disguises himself as a small coconut tree with branches and coconuts, hoping to eat a pair of children, Toto and Mary, but is exposed by Humpy Rumpy.

Next, the crocodile heads to a children's playground located outside an ancient school building and disguises himself as a seesaw, with the help of a large piece wood, hoping to eat a whole class of children, but is exposed by MuggleWump.

Then, the crocodile heads to a funfair and, when nobody is looking, he disguises himself as a wooden crocodile on a merrygoround by sandwiching himself between a brown lion and a yellow dragon (with a pinkred tongue sticking out of its mouth) hoping to eat a young girl named Jill who wants to ride on him, but is exposed by the RolyPoly Bird.

Last of all, the crocodile heads to a picnic place just outside the town. When nobody is looking, the crocodile himself picks a bunch of colorful flowers and arranges it on one of the tables before (from exactly the same table,) taking away one of the benches and hiding it in the bushes and then disguising himself as a long, wooden fourlegged bench, hoping to eat four children who are going out on a picnic, but is exposed by Trunky. ...

Especially the bits where the croc is going to eat and munch all those sweet juicy children.
:) NOM NOM NOM NOM NOM.

I think this is just one of those things natural to all children who already feel like prey with all these nasty adults hanging around. All of them want to eat you in a child's eyes. It's only natural because they see the adults getting eaten by jobs and spouses and the death of their dreams, so why not just imagine getting eaten by crocodiles, too? It's NATURAL!

That being said, this croc plays lots of nasty and cruel tricks in order to fill his belly, but fortunately, he happens to piss off most of the jungle creatures on his way to his playground meal ticket.

Alas! Poor stupid croc! And because this is A dahl tale, it gets really weird. :) Let's alter reality and turn it into an urban fantasy that winds up as a space opera, shall we? RightOn!

I love BBQ.

So does my daughter, it seems!
